Prevention of ASCVD: New Recommendations for Hypertension Management and the Use of Aspirin
Craig D. Williams, PharmD, BCPS, FNLA
Prevention of heart attack and stroke remain key goals of primary care. Optimizing antiplatelet and hypertension therapies are two key pharmacologic strategies to reduce the risk of heart attack and stroke. Recent changes to hypertension guidelines in 2013 have created confusion in primary care and have already been questioned by a large, new study published in 2015. Recommendations on the use of aspirin for primary prevention were substantially changed by the United States Preventative Services Task Force (USPSTF) in 2016. This program will review the key new recommendations for both blood pressure control and optimal use of aspirin and some of the data underlying those new recommendations.
ACPE Details | Learning Objectives:  Apply the new USPSTF commendations for aspirin use to their clinical practice.  Discuss the implications of a major new clinical trial which has questioned our current blood pressure goals. Discuss the current understanding of why hypertension accelerates atherosclerosis and causes heart attacks and strokes.  1 credit hour; Disease State Management/Drug therapy.
